A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S MUSIC

The Vienna Philharmonic, Tanglewood, and more on Great Performances

“Ten thousand people may see a performance during the course of a show’s run in a theater, but one million people or more see it when it airs on Great Performances.”

Starry Nights

THIS MONTH, THIRTEEN's Great Performances series brings you starry summer music specials from around the world. Gustavo Dudamel conducts the Vienna Philharmonic Summer Night Concert 2012 (Fri 31st, 9 p.m.; pictured on the cover), filmed in the magnificent gardens of Austria's Imperial Schönbrunn Palace. Closer to home, we're pleased to present Tanglewood 75th Anniversary Celebration (Fri 10th, 9 p.m.) and Music of the Movies (Sat 11th, 7:30 p.m.), young singing sensation Jackie Evancho's new special. And opera fans won't want to miss Manon (Thu 9th, 8:30 p.m.) and La Traviata (Thu 23rd, 9 p.m.) on Great Performances at the Met.

THIRTEEN spoke with Executive Producer David Horn and Series Producer Bill O'Donnell to get an inside look at the long-running performing arts series.

Great Performances is currently enjoying its 39th year on public television. What was it like to produce the series in the '70s and '80s compared to now?

DAVID HORN: I think the biggest difference is that we've expanded the definition of performing arts programming on public television. In its early years, it consisted primarily of opera, symphonic music, classical music, drama, and dance. Today, we include classic American Songbook, musical theater, popular music, classic rock, and crossover artists like Josh Groban, Andrea Bocelli, and 12-year-old musical prodigy Jackie Evancho.

BILL O'DONNELL: What hasn't changed is that we continue to bring viewers programs they truly won't find anywhere else. The networks and cable have pretty much abandoned everything but mainstream music programming. We're the place where performers of all kinds can do what they do best in a long-form format.

*What is it like working with artists you admire? Do you have a favorite personal memory of working on Great Performances?*

DH: It's been wonderful to work with and meet people like Dame Julie Andrews, Beverly Sills, Walter Cronkite, Garrison Keillor, Harry Connick, Jr., and Sir Patrick Stewart. But one of my favorite memories involves a show we did with Luciano Pavarotti in the mid-80s. It was a show about Neapolitan song, filmed in Naples, and due to a mishap, Luciano and I ended up traveling to the shooting locations on a houseboat called "The Love Boat," complete with disco ball. The crew had no idea we were delayed and while they were frantic with worry, Luciano and I were on the roof of the boat in lawn chairs, singing Sinatra songs.

BO'D: I guess my career high—although it wasn't Great Performances—was when I got to be the FCC guy in Make 'Em Laugh, a documentary series we produced on American comedy, and had to lock up Billy Crystal in jail with the other ground-breakers of comedy. He complimented me on my acting, which pretty much made my day.

*What does it mean to you that Great Performances has inspired so many people to pursue the arts?*

BO'D: Robert Battle, artistic director of Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater, recently came to the studio to tape a promo for THIRTEEN's upcoming 50th anniversary, and he spoke quite passionately and poetically about the experience of seeing the Ailey company on public television when he was a teen growing up in an inner city near Miami.

DH: Battle was completely mesmerized by the program, which was narrated by former Ailey star and artistic director Judith Jamison. He said the experience of watching it and hearing Jamison talk about Ailey's choreography and artistic vision inspired him profoundly. Stories like that speak volumes as one of our goals is to provide a platform for great artists and organizations and bring their work to people whose geography or circumstances may prevent them from having access to the performing arts. Ten thousand people may see a performance during the course of a show's run in a theater, but one million people or more see it when it airs on Great Performances. We're providing a service, and as Robert Battle's story illustrates, it's a service that can dramatically change people's lives.
