SINCE ITS PREMIERE in 1986, THIRTEEN's American Masters series has told the stories of more than 160 groundbreaking artists and their lasting impact on American culture. The award-winning series, hailed by The Baltimore Sun as "one of the greatest cultural storytelling franchises in American life," has profiled artists ranging from Martha Graham and Rod Serling to Judy Garland and John Lennon.

American Masters begins its 25th season this month with Jeff Bridges: The Dude Abides (Wed 12th, 8 p.m. on THIRTEEN; Sun 23rd, 3:30 p.m. on WLIW21). To honor this exciting milestone, THIRTEEN spoke with Susan Lacy, creator and executive producer of the series.

FOR OUR MEMBERS

Being a THIRTEEN member just became more rewarding. To celebrate American Masters' 25th anniversary, we're offering a special gift to our members. The first 50 people to visit thirteen.org/AM25 by January 31 and enter code AM25 will win an American Masters DVD.

What inspired you to create American Masters?

A: When I first came to THIRTEEN in 1979, I worked closely with Great Performances executive producer Jac Venza, who was also the head of the Arts and Culture Department. While I loved the productions we worked on—operas, classical musical concerts, dance pieces, and stage plays—what really fascinated me were the artists who created these shows. So I suggested the idea for a biography series that would examine American culture through the lives and achievements of extraordinary artists—but nobody thought it was a good idea except Jac. There wasn't a place for cultural documentaries on American television at the time, so PBS didn't know there could actually be an audience for this kind of film. I promised PBS that if they scheduled the series, I would give them films that people would watch because they're great stories. I've always known that artist stories are great stories.

How would you explain the longevity of the series?

A: I think the series has lasted because it remains consistently good. I do everything I can to keep the standards as high as possible. There's a lot of pressure to produce films faster and cheaper, but if you want to produce a quality film, it takes time and money. There are no shortcuts. I also think we've endured because we have a reputation for producing films that have artistic integrity. I don't do a film unless we have the subject or estate's permission because I know we'll get better material if we have their cooperation. Having access to letters, diaries, and key primary interviews is what allows you to go deep.

“The beauty of public television is that it isn't about chasing ratings.”

Who is on your American Masters wish list?

A: Frank Sinatra, Barbra Streisand, Steven Spielberg, and Stephen Sondheim—to name a few icons! I'd also like to do films on Miles Davis, Philip Roth, and Johnny Carson. We always try to have a mix of high art and popular culture in the line-up because popular culture is a huge part of American culture. Naturally, if you do a film about a pop star, you're going to get higher ratings, but the beauty of public television is that it isn't about chasing ratings. On American Masters, we feature the James Baldwins and Hemingways and Balanchines and Ralph Ellisons alongside the Bob Dylans—that's what makes the series strong and unique. The raison d'être of public television is that we're an alternative television service, and that means we're doing something nobody else is doing. That's why we're here.

American Masters is made possible by the support of the National Endowment for the Arts and by the Corporation for Public Broadcasting. Additional funding for American Masters is provided by Rosalind P. Walter, The Blanche & Irving Laurie Foundation, Jack Rudin, Rolf and Elizabeth Rosenthal, The André and Elizabeth Kertész Foundation, and public television viewers.
